I really enjoyed the sculpture course in Alton Hampshire library, it was so nice to be reacquainted with clay again. The last time was when I was at school during art class, so quite a long time ago.

It was an absolute Godsend having a space that was calm and safe, where I could immerse myself with clay and feel relaxed. It really was so nice to have that every week, where I could escape too, so to speak.

I have health problems, and my dad who I live with, has Parkinson's Disease. So, to have this time to myself where I'm learning, from such a knowledgeable talented sculptor was amazing. And to have a nice small group of people.

I really did feel it benefited my mental health. I looked forward to going each week and seeing the people in the group. I find routine hard and mixing with others, so being in a small group was quite a challenge, but I felt it was really positive. It was nice to have a variety of different ages to share the experience with.
